

This is a message from Matt Beavers, President and CEO of FNB

As the Coronavirus (COVID-19) spreads throughout the United States, we've been focusing on what we can do to help contain the virus while continuing to serve you. That goal, combined with our concern for our employees and community, is challenging us just as it is other organizations.

Banking Services

We want to assure you we plan to continue to provide all of our services to you. While we operate drive up facilities only, you may prefer to bank remotely. If you don't already use our digital banking services, we hope you will consider signing up. You'll find our web application at the top of our home page. If you download our mobile app to your smartphone, you'll find you can even deposit checks without leaving home. If you need help setting up either digital method, please call one of our branches closest to you. If you do choose to visit one of our branches, rest assured our employees and cleaning crew are following guidelines provided by the CDC.

While this pandemic is a unique situation for banks to work through, the banking industry has faced many natural disasters and have a proven record of operating smoothly, protecting your deposits and providing continued access to your funds. Even with some uncertainty in the world as we move forward, we are quite certain you've chosen the safest place for your money: an FDIC-insured bank.

Employee Readiness

We are putting our Pandemic Preparedness & Response Policy in action. CDC education materials have been shared amongst the staff. Additional sanitation efforts have begun around the bank facilities and have mandated additional hand sanitation efforts throughout the day. Additional staff will be on hand during the business day to answer any account questions.

I hope the best for your family and loved ones as you make your plans during this difficult time.